

The Witch's Stone, Spott, East Lothian, Scotland
Hexenstein, Spott, Schottland

Marion Lillie, the Ringwoody Witch was burnt here in 1698.

<http://womenofscotland.org.uk/memorials/witches-stone-or-stane-and-plaque-near-spot-where-marion-lillie-ringwoodie-witch-was-burnt>

The Witch's Stone" is a rough block of stone about 22 ins each way, lying at the root of a hedge and, at the time of the visit by the RCAHMS in 1913, almost covered with road scrapings. Spott was notorious for its witches in the 17th and early 18th centuries and, according to the RCAHMS this stone is placed near the spot where Marion Lillie, the Ringwoody Witch, was burnt about 1698.

The only stone mentioned by the New Statistical Account [NSA] is that 'to be seen a little way to the east of the manse' which was supposed to mark the place where 'the last witch executed in Scotland' was burnt.

http://www.johngraycentre.org/collections/getrecord/ELHER\_MEL1560/

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spott,\_East\_Lothian#/media/File:Witches\_Stone.jpg